

The image shows a page from a handwritten church register, likely a burial register, with a large watermark 'EKT' overlaid on the right side. The page is divided into columns by vertical lines. At the top, there are some faint headers and a date '1669'. The main body of the page contains several rows of entries, each starting with a date or month in the left column, followed by names in the subsequent columns. The entries are written in a cursive script. The watermark 'EKT' is a large, stylized, semi-transparent mark that spans across the right half of the page.
